There exists to-day in the whole world a great struggle on the part of capitalism to retain a dominating authority in the sphere of politics and industry. The extent of this conflict is visible in all the great events of the moment - the Paris Conference, the intervention in Russia, the financial policies of the governments, high costs of living, c. The International welcomes the splendid efforts being made by the working classes to transform capitalism into socialism and to prevent the old order of exploitation being again firmly founded upon Society; in particular does it welcome with enthusiasm the new Socialist governments and claims for them internal political liberty and self-determination at the hands of the Associated Governments, and pledges to them the support of the International Working Class Movement. The International recognises that, in a world passing through the revolutionary conditions which must always follow upon war, new problems arise and old ones gain greater importance, and that therefore the International must make its position precise on some of these problems. In particular it must consider the forms of democracy and representative institutions, the place of revolutions in the transformation of Society, the relations between industrial and political organisation and mass action, and it must prepare plans for socialisation in view of the struggle upon which the world has now definitely entered between proletariat and capitalist power. The Conference therefore instructs...
